- 1-12. Choices for the Future - Four Transportation Visions for the 21st Century. Translinks 21 Planning Visions. Overview of Four Future Directions. Wisconsin Department of Transportation, 1993. What follows are four planning visions - starting points for what transportation could look like by 2020 or earlier. These alternatives, which could emerge from Translinks 21, are designed to encourage discussion at public forums during the process. The actual plan may be one of these - but more likely, it will include elements from each and modifications to all four. The four different planning visions presented for discussion include: Option #1: Wisconsin's future transportation system is driven primarily by market choices, with most public revenues and programs directed toward highway improvements. Economic development priorities are the primary factor in transportation decisions. Option #2: Wisconsin's transportation systems and policies remain largely as they are today. Highways remain the dominant mode of travel in Wisconsin. On a modest basis, more revenues are invested in complementary modes such as transit, freight and passenger rail, airports, harbors and bicycle facilities where they are appropriate and cost-effective. Option #3: While highways remain the primary mode of travel, a much wider range of transportation options is developed and enhanced in all areas of the state, supplementing highways as a travel choice. Environmental protection and travel choice, along with economic development, receive more emphasis. Option #4: Wisconsin's transportation decisions are shaped largely by environmental and social values. State regulations and pricing changes are implemented to reduce auto and truck travel and greatly expand or enhance urban and rural public transportation modes, and to shift freight movements from truck to rail. Wisconsin.
