"Well, in our country," said Alice, still panting a little, "you'd generally get somewhere else—if you ran very fast for a long time..." "A slow sort of country!" said the Queen. "Now, here, you see, it takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast as that!"
(Lewis Carroll, Through the Looking-Glass, and What Alice Found There)¹

1. Fight for the future

During his unfortunately short professional career, Frederic Sterling Lee (1949-2014) made unprecedented contributions to heterodox economics in terms of developing heterodox microeconomic theory, building a global community of heterodox economists, and practicing his radical ideas for social change. These three domains of Lee's contributions fully overlap in his fight for the future of heterodox economics (see Lee, 2004; Henry, 2015; Jo, Todorova, 2015, for more detailed accounts of Lee's contributions to heterodox economics²). He was, as many heterodox economists remember, a dedicated captain of the heterodox economics movement over the past thirty years. In their tributes, Fred Lee's friends, colleagues, and students recognize that he was an extraordinary heterodox economist, "a remarkable man who played a unique role in
